

Divorce Group in Second Year at PLNU

by Michelle Johnson

staff writer

The Wellness Center is continuing its divorce group for a second year due to student interest. Evelyn de Villiers, a former psychologist with the Wellness Center, started the divorce group. De Villiers has seven children as a result of blended families, four of which are college-age.

She formed a divorce group that has approximately 16 to 20 students. The group gives them a place to interact with their peers.

"I really could see that students didn't want it to be a lecture," said de Villiers.

Now de Villiers is working in her own private practice, but Jim Coil, Wellness Center outreach coordinator, is continuing the group. He believes that divorce impacts this generation more so than pre-

see Divorce • p2